This book belongs to:

Once, there was a merchant with three daughters, Ethel, Aggie and Belle.

Ethel and Aggie were selfish, greedy girls who ordered Belle around. But Belle was kind and good.

One day the father had to go away on a business trip. He asked each of his daughters what gift they would like him to bring, when he returned.

Can you match each sister with the gift she wants?

Soon Belle's father had finished his business and was beginning his journey back home. He had found gifts for Aggie and Ethel. But he was still searching for a rose for Belle. Then suddenly, he saw one! It was growing in the middle of a strange garden.

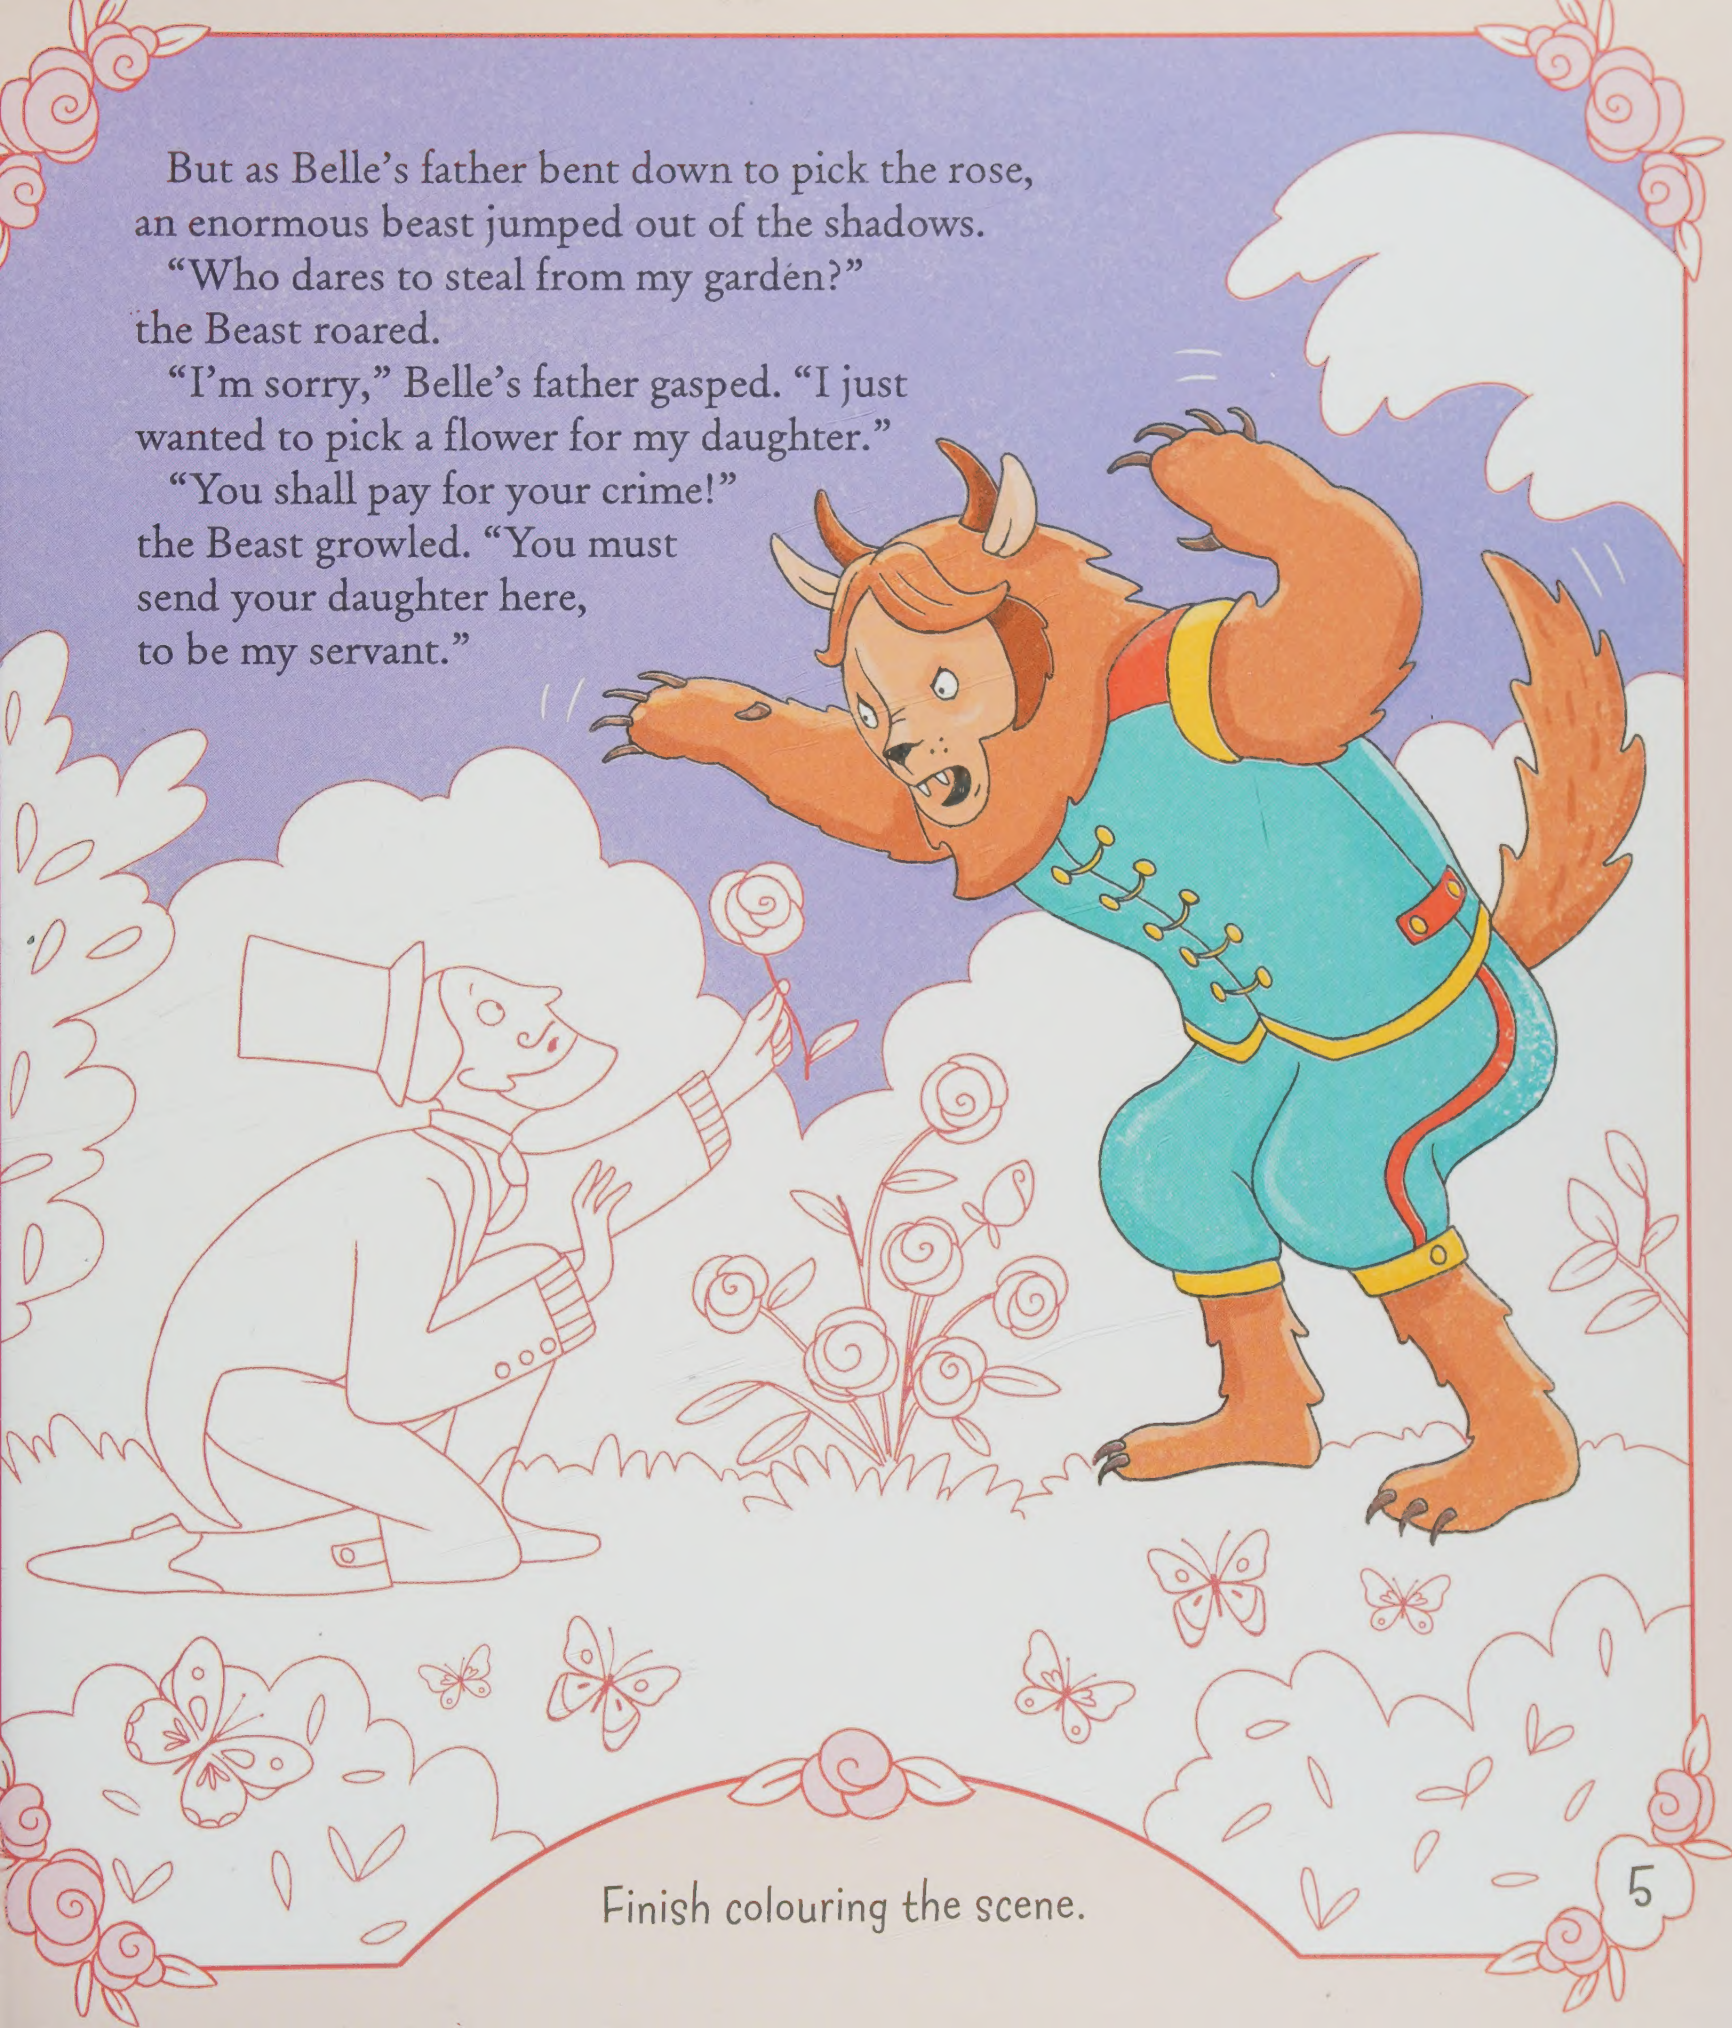

But as Belle's father bent down to pick the rose,
an enormous beast jumped out of the shadows.

"Who dares to steal from my garden?"
the Beast roared.

"I'm sorry," Belle's father gasped. "I just wanted to pick a flower for my daughter."

"You shall pay for your crime!"
the Beast growled. "You must send your daughter here,
to be my servant."

Belle's father returned home with a heavy heart and broke the news to Belle that she would have to go and work at the Beast's castle.

Welcome home

Belle felt sad when she heard her father's news. But she agreed to go, so that her father could keep his promise to the Beast.

"I will miss you all," she said. But Belle's sisters weren't upset at all.

Circle the objects
Belle should take with her.

Belle set out for the castle.
It was a long way and it
soon grew dark.

Name the woodland animals that are watching Belle.

At last Belle reached the castle. She pushed open the front door and crept inside. Suddenly she heard a terrible roar and the Beast appeared!

Belle stepped forward. "Hello," she said softly. "My name is Belle."

The Beast was shocked. No one had ever spoken kindly to him before.

Colour in the scene.

After a few days, Belle began to feel at home in the castle. She opened the windows and let the light inside. She swept the floors and cleaned the rooms. And she began to get to know the Beast better.

And because Belle was always kind to the Beast, he became friendlier, too. He picked roses for her. He showed her beautiful butterflies, and told her stories about the castle. Belle began to grow fond of him.

Finish off each butterfly and colour them in.

Belle was having fun with the Beast, but she missed her family. So the Beast gave her a special gift to make her feel less homesick.

"It's a magic crystal ball so you can see your family," smiled the Beast. But when Belle looked into the crystal she cried out in shock.

"My father is sick! I must go to him."

The Beast didn't want Belle to leave.
"You may go," he said. "But you must promise to return in two weeks' time."
Belle agreed, and set off for home.

Which path will lead
Belle home to her father?

Belle's father was overjoyed to see her again.
And with her help, he began to get better.

Belle's sisters were glad she was home, too.

"Now Belle is back, she can do all the work again," Ethel whispered.

"Yes, and we must make sure she stays here forever!" Aggie added.

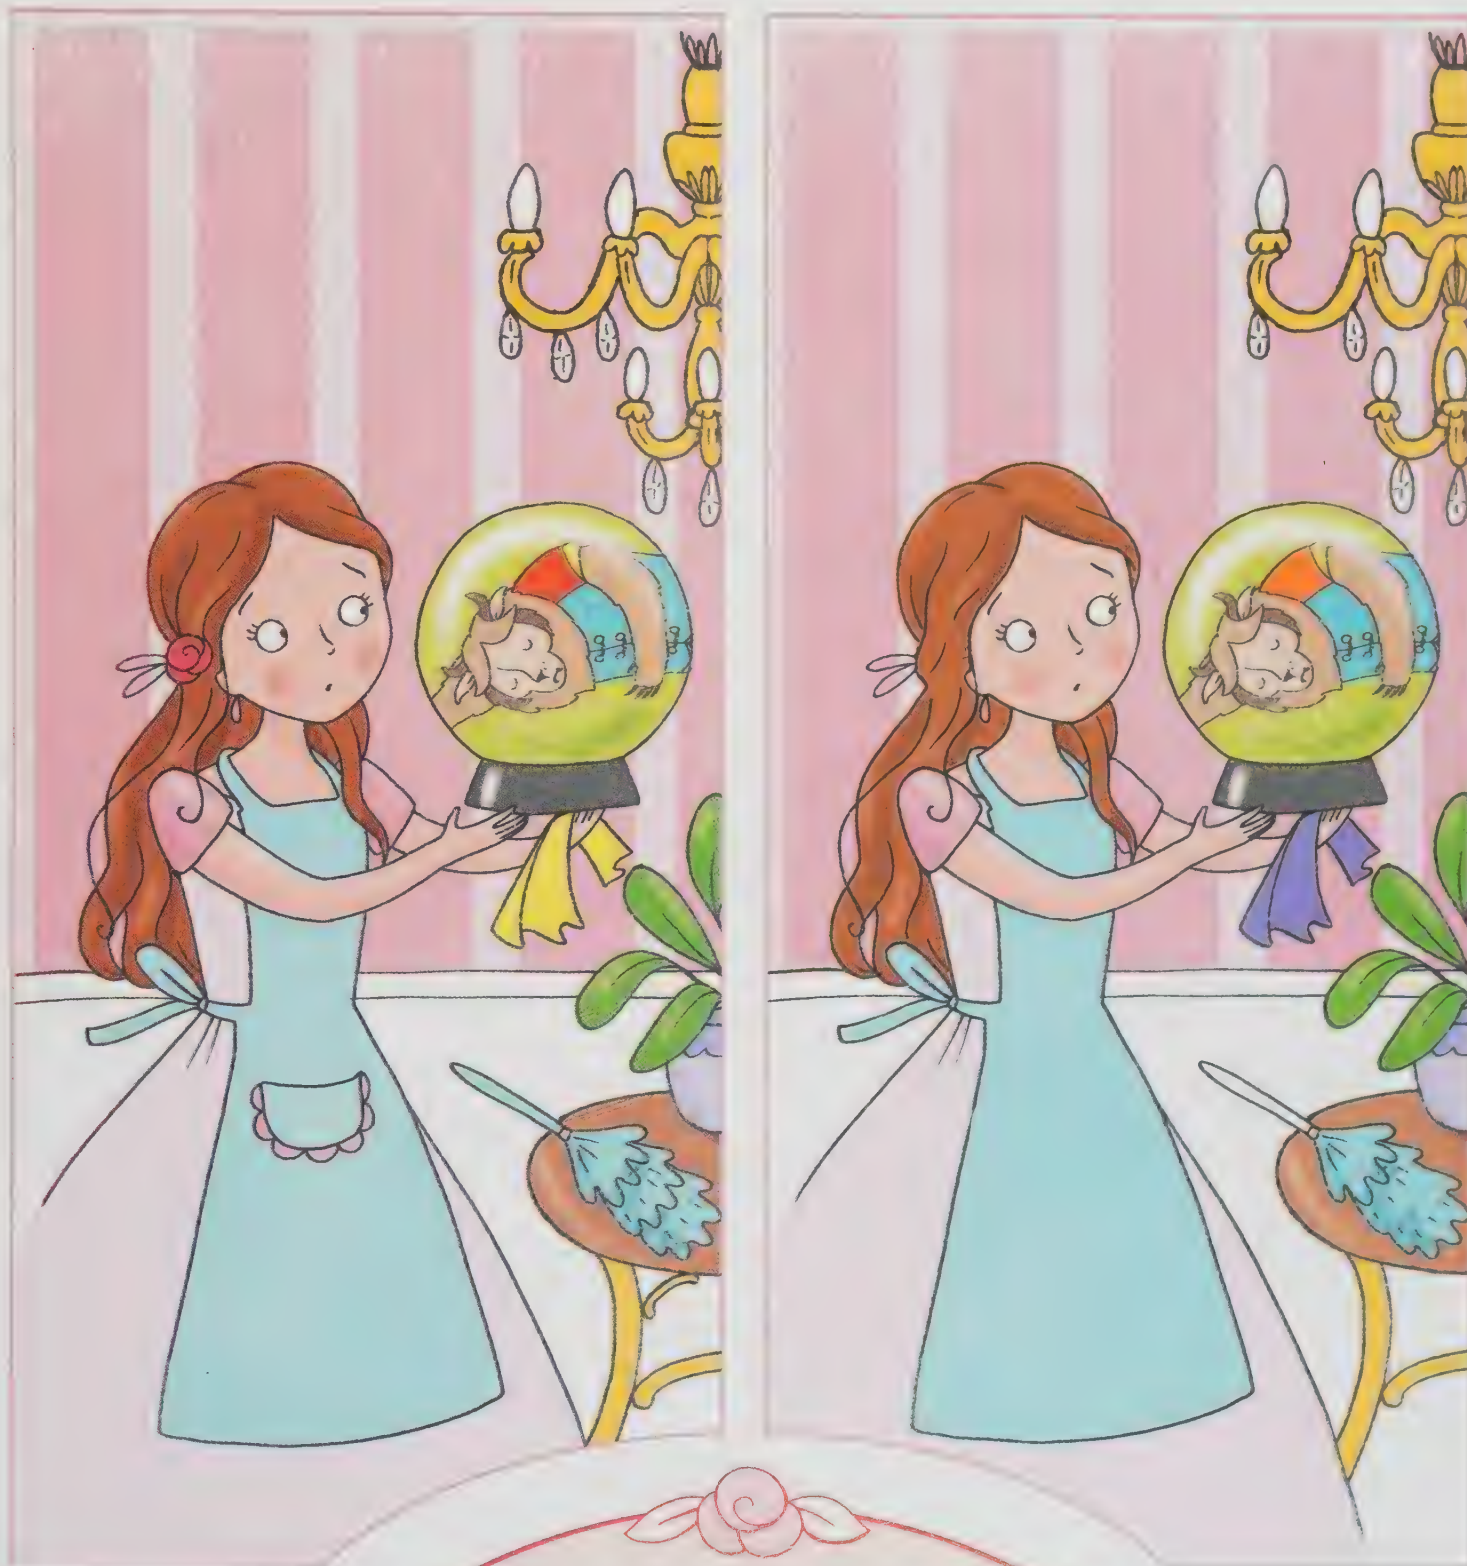

Spot the chores
for Belle to do.

Poor Belle was run off her feet caring for her father and her lazy sisters who were playing cruel tricks on her. She was so busy she forgot all about her promise to return to the Beast.

Belle's sisters have hidden the crystal ball. Can you find it?

When Belle found her crystal ball she couldn't believe what she saw.
"Oh no!" Belle cried. "The Beast is dying! I must go to him."

Spot the seven differences between the two scenes.

Belle galloped back to the castle. But when she got there,
the Beast was hardly breathing.

"Please don't die," Belle whispered. "I love you." As she spoke there was a flash of lightning. And the Beast began to change.

Belle couldn't believe her eyes. The Beast had turned into a tall, handsome young man.

"My name is Prince Ivan," he said. "A wicked fairy cast a spell on me. I was cursed to live as a beast until I found true love. Now you have saved me."
